

Guidance note: reviewing nominations and interviewing nominees

This document is intended to provide guidance for those reviewing nominations received for Society positions on boards, committees and panels, (hereafter referred to as committees), and those interviewing any nominees for such roles.

The guidance provided is not exhaustive but is intended to prompt discussion and consideration around the diversity of Society decision makers, addressing feedback from our community on the current lack of representation in many areas of our work and delivering on our strategic commitment to place EDI considerations at the heart of all that we do. This approach also supports a consistent and transparent process across all committees and areas of Society operations.

Reviewers and interviewers are reminded that all committee roles are voluntary positions. Volunteers can bring new opinions, ideas and approaches, and will act as advocates for the Society within their own communities.

Selecting reviewers and interviewers (hereafter referred to as reviewers):

- It is important that reviewers understand the full scope of the role and the levels of experience/expertise required to perform it well;
- Reviewers should understand how the respective committee functions, its current make-up and skillset and how its work supports the delivery of Society strategy and key charitable objectives;
- Where possible reviewers should represent diverse perspectives to help avoid shared biases and encourage broader and more inclusive thinking about who is being invited to join a committee.

Prompts/questions to consider:

- Does the nominee have the required skills/experience to perform the role effectively? Do these complement those already in place on the committee?
- What is the nominee's motivation/interest in volunteering for the Society and in this specific role?
- Do they bring a unique perspective?
- How could they help the committee to adapt and improve?

Selecting candidates for appointment:

- Reviewers should rank all nominees in order of preference, noting those that are considered appointable and those that are not, with feedback on their nominations/interviews and areas they may wish to reflect on for the future, (a form is provided for this purpose as Appendix I);
- The completed table and any accompanying feedback from reviewers will be provided to the Nominations Panel for their review and final decision on appointment.
